Call for Instructors and Specialists:

The Natural Resources Training Group (NRTG) is expanding our online course offerings and programs. We are recruiting instructors to teach our current and future online and face-to-face professional development and community-based courses.

An ideal Instructor candidate:

- Extensive knowledge in their subject area
- An experienced teacher and mentor
- Passionate and empathetic, a 'people person'
- A team player
- Entrepreneurial
- Inventive, creative and forward-thinking
- Demonstrated experience working successfully with culturally diverse groups

Applicants must be Registered Professional Biologists (RPBio) or eligible for RPBio status. This is a part-time, flexible contract position that will appeal to someone wanting to augment their existing work, create a potential passive income source and expand their skills and abilities. The level of your involvement is your choice, as we will work with your existing and future workload. In this role, you can work and teach from home or travel abroad with future in-person training deliveries.

NRTG offers industry-leading rates and unlimited potential for growth and professional development. Come work with our team, the most experienced natural resource trainers in North America!

Please apply by sending a current CV, three references, and a short overview to darren@nrtraininggroup.com. Outline what existing and NRTG courses you could teach or propose new course ideas you feel would be popular with natural resource professionals in North America. Please no phone calls at this time.

Thanks for your time and consideration.
