

Teaching Opportunities:

Vancouver Island University's Natural Resources Extension Program (NREP) is seeking independent contract instructors to join our team and deliver BC's most highly recommended industry-recognized natural resource programs. Ideally, candidates will be proficient in either terrestrial or aquatic assessment methodology, and will have experience working in-community and utilizing methodologies for teaching field-skills in an instructional or mentorship role alongside Indigenous peoples, government and industry, providing guidance and support in the progressive and everchanging natural resource/environmental sector.

NREP is recognized for providing leading edge methodology and field training, and for collaborating with professional associations in designing and implementing strategic training opportunities for its clients. It has improved connections to academic recognition through development of unique micro-credentialing opportunities, and works with professional associations for increased access to qualified designations.

Suitable candidates for this position will possess the following attributes:

- Have experience as an instructor and/or mentor in the field
- Possess and convey expertise in applicable related subject matter
- Experienced and able to work with diverse cultures, sometimes in remote communities for extended periods
- Friendly, approachable and a team player
- Registration or eligibility for Registration with the College of Applied Biology

Please note that this position is a contract-based position suitable for individuals who have a flexible schedule or would like to augment their current income. NREP offers competitive rates and unlimited growth potential, depending on availability, course interest and diversity of subject matter expertise. Frequency of work may be influenced by instructor's ability to travel.

Interested? Please mail or email your cover letter and resume, including specification of subject interest, by January 20th, 2023. References will be requested from short-listed applicants.

We appreciate all submissions. Only those short-listed for this opportunity will be contacted.
